Project Two Final Submission:

Between my first and final submissions, I made a few changes to the site based on the feedback I received:

I replaced the mobile menu down arrow icon with a three lines icon to make it look more normal. I also made the description on the home page easier to read and shorter. I updated the site fonts, and added more padding to the desktop views and less to the mobile views. I also made the points on the about me page more uniform and left aligned. I also added social media to the footer. Due to the client's request, I opted not to include a slideshow and decided to keep just the grid because they liked it that way. As the client, I felt like it was their decision to make, not mine. I also changed the colors to be pastel, per the client's request. I also downscaled the photos a bit more so they would load even faster.

Some parts of the project that I am proud of are the packages page, how when you click on a specific package, it will fill in the form with the package you selected. If I had more time, I would have continued to work on a Safari bug I was seeing where some items would render too soon.

I used Bootstrap 5, JavaScript, CSS, SASS, and Font Awesome for this project.

I customized the cards both on the packages page and also on the blog page to make them stand out more. I really like the way the photos on the blog page pop out of the card.
